Hens should be allowed important for people to have the ability to source their own food and have control over that
In my opinion, if someone wants to raise backyard hens, it must be on a large property a good distance away from neighbours.
This is a good idea for personal use, this should not require large numbers of hens. Also there will be a cost to enforcing compliance with the rules around these hens, has this been accounted for in budgeting?
Hens are very sociable creatures... if they are kept well in a clean space/ shed and can walk around outside in small groups I find it a pretty, lively picture of "old fashioned, historical tradition, especially of Killarney! Of course neighbors concerns should always be respected. And therefore the property size should always limit the amount of animals kept.
I would be concerned about the smell for close neighbours as well as the noise especially if roosters are involved.
Unless someone has a heated shed they need 40 or probably more hens to keep them all from freezing. You must have electrical in the shed to provide light on a daily basis or they won't produce eggs if that's what you're trying for. Meat hens are a different breed of course. What are people going to do with mountains of uncomposted smelly shit full of partially digested seeds that are attracting huge numbers of rats etc? How many neighbour disputes will result? People who advocate for hens inside the residential area likely know NOTHING about keeping hens.
So long as the animals are being cared for I personally have no issue with residents keeping hens on their property. I live close to someone who has some and they pose no disturbance.
I think it is a great idea to allow backyard hens also I think doing a survey like this is a great way to communicate with the citizen of Killarney
Amazing little composters and low maintenance.
If people keep their hens in a coop and fenced area and maintain the coop, there are zero issues to growing your own food. It needs to be encouraged.
Most communities and cities allow for backyard hens now, even parts of Toronto allow it. Killarney is a small rural area and I don't see why would wouldn't allow folks to have backyard hens.
Hens will not hurt anything. They will actually help people.
This would be a huge plus for the community. We use to be farmland.
Will forms need to be filled ? Are there regulations for having hens?
It is very important to allow people freedom to be self sufficient. This should be promoted and people educated on all matters of self sufficiency.
Backyard hens provide a cheap and excellent source of protein for our community. Eggs can be shared with other in the community for the benefit of all.
I fully support residents keeping hens to provide for themselves. However, attention must be paid to the standards under which they are kept. Cleanliness, respect for neighbours, conditions for the hens themselves.
Backyard hen should be allowed but if standards aren't met and neighbours complain they should be asked to remove them.
